Architectural Notes

I used CSS cascade layers so that everything will be organized in the order we were told: reset/base, layout, components, utilities, states, overrides and print. I used the @layer for further modern styling like we learned previously to make sure the correct styles are being applied in the right order. I set up as much as I could for the overall site so that it will be easier to follow a roadmap when it comes time to completely finish and style the site. The tedious parts like colors, sizing, and general repeated styles are all listed in advance so I won't have to waste time entering the same styling options over and over.

AI disclosure:

I used AI to generate ideas for @layer utilities to use for a portfolio site.
